Environmental education activities

During the environmental education activities we emphasize the teaching of the holistic nature of the environment through interdisciplinary and problem-solving approaches. This has to start as early in education as possible. The primary school is the natural place to introduce children to environmental education, since at this level they instinctively have a holistic view of the environment; they have not yet been trained to compartmentalize their learning into separate subjects as they will have to do in secondary and higher education. Introducing critical thinking and problem-solving approaches in EE, especially at primary school level, is fundamental if our students are to become skillful in the identification and solution of environmental problems as students and later on as adult citizens and possibly decision-makers
